PortugalNew insights into the mechanisms of D-glucose metabolism in brain. It is firmly established that D-glucose is the main energy substrate of the brain; however, the routes of its degradation are not well established. The metabolism of D-glucose was studied in tissue slices and suspensions of glial and neuronal tissues of the rat forebrain. D-Glucose, D-lactate, L-lactate, D-fructose, D-sorbitol and D-sucrose were used as substrates, together with 14C-labeled D-glucose. Tissue slices and suspensions were incubated in Krebs-Ringer bicarbonate buffer with or without glucose (25 mM) and the formation of $14CO_2$ from [1-14C]-D-glucose was assayed. D-Glucose was the preferred substrate among the test substances. The metabolism of [1-14C]-D-glucose in brain slices was inhibited by specific inhibitors of glycolysis (iodoacetic acid), hexokinase

(heptelidic acid) and phosphorylase kinase (heptelidic acid), as well as by cytochalasin B and 2-deoxy-D-glucose. In brain suspensions, D-glucose was metabolized mainly via oxidative phosphorylation, with little or no D-glucose conversion to L-glucose (glucose 6-phosphate formation). In contrast, the conversion of D-glucose to L-glucose in glial cells was almost as
