S7Protect can either add or remove the `KNOW_HOW_PROTECT` flag from a STEP7 programs, and it is the first of its kind. It has been designed to be easier than STEP7's Protect application, which is what comes with STEP7. This is because it does not require you to navigate through the built-in STEP7 GUI. There are many other users who find it easier to use than the one that comes with STEP7. This is because it allows you to view and edit the protection flag on multiple projects at once. The application is similar to S7Protect for S7, but it allows you to set and remove the `KNOW_HOW_PROTECT` flag on any STEP7 program that is currently running, while S7Protect for S7 allows you to set and remove the protection flag on any project that is currently open in the STEP7 GUI. The application's options include changing the default directory for the protection flag, which is `protected_directory`, for protection types D, O, and N. You can also change the user to which the protection flag is set, and you can also set the protection flag for specific programs. In the configuration window, you can add, remove, or set protection flags on all currently open projects at once. The application also allows you to generate a custom string with a user-defined layout, which will include the protection flags set by the application. Here are some screenshots of the application's configuration window: You can download the latest stable release of S7Protect here. Q: SVG id - how to match data-* prefix? Is there a way to match an ID if it's data-? I'm trying to find an SVG tag with an ID that starts with data- to modify. I'm currently using `document.querySelectorAll('[data-foo-` bar="baz"]'); Which works fine as long as the ID doesn't start with data-. What I'd like to do is match the data-* portion with querySelectorAll to add an id attribute. A: Yes, you can use CSS attribute selectors. You can use ~= (like here) and the following way: *[data-foo-bar~="baz"] { //... } You can also use :contains (for HTML elements, and for SVG you can use the ::svg is credited with creating the painting, as well as the original design. He also spent a few months in a psychiatric ward in the early 1970s, which is the reason for his ‘doomsday-scenario’ interpretation. In April, Forbes published an article that highlighted how this piece was quite misunderstood over the years. Many assumed it was meant to be a ‘doomsday’ painting, but this was never its intended meaning. “It was supposed to be an allegorical painting of love and war,” Steven said. “The devils are the people who are fighting love and goodness in the world.” Originally, the painting was commissioned by the Santa Fe Chamber Music Festival for an event that involved a bunch of his pieces. But in the end, Steven didn’t finish it in time. So, for the next two years, he worked on this piece, along with other artworks. “It was very important that the people who looked at it understand what I was trying to communicate,” he said. But not everyone ‘got it.’ “I said, ‘If people think this is meant to be a doomsday painting, it’s just a metaphor,’ and they said, ‘OK,’ and went on to other things,” Steven said. In 2002, he decided to depict the world as it really was, with this one single painting. “I decided to make it right,” he said. “I thought, I should make it plain.” The artist sold the painting to an investor for $2.5 million, which he used to finance his exhibit at the Bronx Museum. If you’re thinking about the end
