Clinical evaluation of tooth brushing using an electric toothbrush in a group of five-year-old children. The purpose of the study was to investigate the efficacy of a commercially available electric toothbrush in the reduction of plaque and gingivitis in children using age-appropriate brushing techniques and to determine which children were likely to retain the brush. A random sample of 89 children in a day-care center in the Bronx, NY, participated in a double-blind study of 1,000 toothbrushings. They were randomly assigned to either an experimental group (n = 44) that received electric toothbrushes for 1 year, or a control group (n = 45) that received manual toothbrushes for 1 year. The children's mothers were taught the recommended toothbrushing technique. The children were examined prior to the toothbrushing, and at 1, 3, 6, 9 and 12 months following the baseline examination
