Follow our brand-new No. 2, PEDRO, as he races toward the top of the Olympic men's downhill. FIA World Cup veteran Peter Fill claims he hasn't won a World Cup race since August and the "old, rusty" racer is eager to face down his opponents in the first downhill of the 2014/2015 season. Fill is set to move from the front group to the chasing pack after snow and ice in the starting area caused problems for the hard charging Slovenian. Fill has been in the top group since the giant slalom, and is sure to make his presence felt on Thursday in Val d’Isere. “It’s good, I like this new way of racing,” said Fill. “I’m almost not a factor in the race anymore. I stay in the pack, watch the guys before me and put myself in the right position. If they fall back, I can do it faster.” Peter Fill on the

2014 FIS World Cup downhill podium “Last season was good,” said Fill, “But this season is bigger and I want to win the first race.” In what is likely to be a three-man battle, the likes of World Cup champion Marcel Hirscher, Italian Luca Astuti, American Bode Miller, and Spaniard Enrico Gasparotto will jockey for position on the start.

Hirscher and Miller have won World Cup races this season, and Hirscher is the favorite with his dual World Championship titles. Astuti and Gasparotto have been well on the map.
