Sticking to a regular routine when it comes to your diet, regular physical activity and sleeping habits can make all the difference when it comes to your overall health. Just because you're physically active every day, doesn't necessarily mean you're getting sufficient rest; what is more, all that moving and training can also lead to some rather obvious side effects like hunger, cramps, bloating, and even weight gain. Dieting is one thing; feeling good and looking good is another. Since this time of year is a rather busy one for most of us, we decided to take a look at some of the most effective ways to stay in shape while also enjoying the holidays. The following are three tips you can use to look and feel good as we prepare to ring in the new year. Tip #1: Stay in shape with a wellness plan Not only should you be making plans for all the meals and activities you'll enjoy with family and friends, but you should also be making sure you don't end up gaining more weight during the festive season than you already have. When you start your wellness plan for this holiday season, you should first set a goal for yourself. This goal should be to ensure you maintain your current level of fitness while also getting ready for the rest of the year. Once you've done this, you should begin working towards making all your goals a reality. Remember, your goal should be to be healthy and fit as the season ends, not just to look good during the holiday festivities. Since you're focused on health and fitness, you'll probably want to limit your intake of food and beverages high in calories, sugar, and saturated fats. One of the biggest issues you're likely to face when it comes to these foods and beverages is their effects on your body, the brain, and your mood. Instead of blowing a lot of money on unhealthy foods and drinks at the holiday festivities, you'll want to make sure you
